Christian Pulisic (USA)

Midfielder

Best player for the US Men's National Team

Plays for Chelsea in the Premier League (England)

Cheeky nickname: Captain America

An inspiring presence for the US in National Team competitions

Quick and agile with the ball at his feet, but his somewhat diminutive size and frame leads some lesser skilled CONCACAF teams to play a "Hack-a-Shaq" style of game, fouling Pulisic often to keep him in check. Suffers from a history of soft-tissue injuries.

Neymar Jr. (BRA)

Forward

Best player on the Brazil Men's National Team

Plays for Paris Saint-Germain in the Ligue 1 (France)

Widely considered to be one of the best players in the world. Known not only for his scoring ability, but for his overly dramatic "flops", writhing on the ground trying to convince the referee to issue a card to the player that just fouled him. Usually results in little more than wasting time, allowing those around him to catch their breaths and rest. On occasion, Neymar has been given a yellow card for "simulation"—faking being injured in an unsportsmanlike fashion.

Special Rules:

Individual, Inspiring, Scorer, Simulation

Scorer: 18" shooting attack

Simulation: Once per game after given an Advance or Halt order, Neymar may enact Simulation at the end of the movement phase. Each friendly unit within 6" (but not Neymar himself) removes d3 points of damage (roll separately for each). Neymar automatically becomes disordered, unable to shoot this turn. In addition, roll a d6. On a roll of 1, Neymar has been given a Yellow Card, and his nerve is reduced to 9/11 to reflect that he is now that much closer to being kicked off the field.
